AB sports face off Discovery sports devices advertised on TELEVISION often touted as safer, more effective, and time-efficient than traditional workouts. But when researchers at Truman State University compared a product called Ab Slide to a classic abdominal crisp, they found that crunch was slightly more effective than ab slides. Their advice remains skeptical of sports products that have not been evaluated by independent scientific research, says Michael Baird, PhD, lead author of the study. Instead, make your crisps more effective by increasing resistance -- keep a plate of weights or stretch your arms overhead, or do both. Upgrades add a rollout barbell to your workout. The bird says the move is similar to the move you want to use with the Ab slide. Load the barbell with 10-pound plates and kneel on the exercise mat with your shoulders over the bar. Grab the bar by grabbing the shoulder width. Keep your knees in place and straight your arms, roll the bar in front of you as much as you can without arching your back, and then reverse the motion to get back to the starting position. So I ended up from holidays to zillion email messages, not to mention projects that need to be launched and others that need to be finished. It's all a little bit brain-filled. You think I have a lot. Pete's comments, since it's been such a busy few weeks. For example, we've seen a lot of people opining on the beta version of IE7 (Internet Explorer 7) that has been floating around the web, such as Calling Paul Thurrott to boycott IE7 and counter-comment from Ryan Hoffman. Apple then released a mouse with *gasp* multiple buttons, which set Mac loyalists into another frenzy—and that soon after Apple announced the move to Intel. I suppose Apple's gradual slide into the dark side may be a good fodder for discussion, but I only live a few miles from Apple's main campus, and the volcanic smoke rising from mount Doom's infinity ring campus hasn't been seen yet. It has also been busy at Ziff Davis sites, as AMD comes out with a low-cost dual-core Athlon 64, which should put a hurt on Intel. Meanwhile, eWeek has been busy digging into ins and outs of the beta version of Microsoft Vista. But I was away, so I'm still digesting it all. I can tell you that riding a zipline 1,100 feet over the valley separating Weissler and Blackcomb is a real rush and there are more restaurants on Robson Street in Vancouver, B.C., than any street I can remember to be on, always. It's not a column about Lloyd's fun holidays, though. So I've discovered together a few technological tips and tricks I've discovered in the last few weeks. I can't get personal credit for any of this, but I seem to have misplaced some resources. Hopefully you'll find these useful. Continue... Continue...
